SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA

SACRAMENTO – California renters who have been drowning in unaffordable housing costs would see much-needed relief under a bill unveiled Wednesday by State Senator Steve Glazer (D-Contra Costa), Assembly members Lorena Gonzalez (D-San Diego), Sharon Quirk-Silva (D-Orange County) and 28 co-authors.

The legislation, SB 248, would increase California’s renter’s credit for the first time in 40 years and would represent significant help to single parents in particular.

“Housing costs are going through the roof in California and families are struggling to pay the rent,” Glazer said. “Forty years have passed since the last time the renter’s credit was increased, so it’s about time we provide this needed financial relief to renters.”

Assemblywoman Gonzalez, a principal co-author, said: “Nearly half the state’s residents are renters, but they have been largely ignored in our tax policies,” “While California homeowners receive more than $4 billion in tax relief through mortgage deductions, renters’ relief has

Being a resident of Sacramento for five years, it is hard to live as a single parent in California. The accommodation problems are complex and the rents are increasing day by day; I feel lucky to find <http://www.evictiony.com> who gave me solid advice on how to handle the eviction problems and get some peace of mind as a tenant. If you feel you are ignored and need help, <http://www.evictiony.com> professionals can provide relief in such a crisis situation.
